INTRODUCTION

It seems like you hear it some of the time from nearly every one you know – “I’m SO stressed out!” Or, you look at someone and know they are under a pressure and a lot of stress. Pressure abounds in the world today. Those pressures cause stress and anxiety, and often we are ill equipped to deal with stressful situations or conditions that trigger anxiety that can make us sick. Physically and mentally, sick.

The statistics are staggering. It has been reported that one in every eight Americans age 18-54 suffers from an anxiety disorder. This totals over 19 million people! Research conducted by the National Institute of Mental Health has shown that anxiety disorders are the number one mental health problem among American women and are second only to alcohol and drug abuse by men. A recent survey indicated that 70 to 90% of us feel stressed out at work or home. Unless we learn to manage the stress, we will get sick.

Women suffer from anxiety and stress almost twice as much as men. Anxiety disorders are the most common mental illness in America, surpassing even depression in numbers. Anxiety is the most common mental health issue facing adults over 65 years of age. Anxiety disorders cost the U.S. $46.6 billion annually. Anxiety sufferers see an average of five doctors before being successfully diagnosed.

Unfortunately, stress and anxiety go hand in hand. In fact, one of the major symptoms of stress is anxiety. And stress accounts for 80 percent of all illnesses either directly or indirectly.

In fact, stress is more dangerous than we thought. You've probably heard that it can raise your blood pressure, increasing the likelihood of a stroke in the distant future, but recently a health insurance brochure claimed that 90 percent of visits to a primary care physician were stress-related disorders.

Health Psychology magazine reports that chronic stress can interfere with the normal function of the body's immune system. And studies have proven that stressed individuals have an increased vulnerability to catching an illness and are more susceptible to allergic, autoimmune, or cardiovascular diseases.

Doctors agree that during chronic stress, the functions of the body that are nonessential to survival, such as the digestive and immune systems, shut down. This is why people get sick. There are also many occurrences of psychosomatic illness, an illness with an emotional or psychological side to it.

Furthermore, stress often prompts people to respond in unhealthy ways such as smoking, drinking alcohol, eating poorly or over-eating, or becoming physically inactive. This damages the body in addition to the wear and tear of the stress itself.

Stress is a part of daily life. It's how we react to it that makes all the difference in maintaining our health. Pressures occur throughout life and those pressures cause stress. You need to realize that you will never completely get rid of stress in your life, but you can learn coping techniques to turn that stress into a healthier situation.

When I first got the idea for this book, I immediately thought, "Why another book on stress?" Stress affects everybody differently and you could eliminate stress and anxiety by locking yourself into a room and never going out or talking to anyone again". But that wouldn't make a very informative book, now would it?

People have suffered from anxiety disorders caused by stress for years. Although I have learned how to cope with that affected my personal and professional life I'm always learning new things and mechanisms to deal with stress. What I've done in this book is taken some of my own experiences and combined them with advice from experts to give you tools that will help you cope in stressful situations.

I've also outlined some different ways you can face debilitating anxiety and panic attacks that many people suffer from. While researching this book, I came across some amazing information and I can't wait to share it with you. So, let's look at how to eliminate stress and anxiety from your life!

WHY ARE WE SO STRESSED OUT?

We're living in very trying and difficult times and things don't seem to be getting any easier. Sometimes life can seem terribly painful and unfair, yet somehow we manage to struggle on, day after day, hoping and praying that things will soon get better.

But day-by-day the world becomes a crazier and more uncertain place to live in, and as stressful. Nothing seems safe anymore. Millions of people are in record levels of debt. Many are losing their jobs, their homes, their health and sometimes even their sanity. Worry, depression and anxiety seem to have become a way of life for way too many people.

We seem to have entered the Age of Anxiety. In fact, in 2002, the cover of Time magazine proclaimed this loud and clear on one of their covers as the featured story in that issue. The constant stress and uncertainties of living in the 21st century have certainly taken their toll, and as a result many of us seem to live a life of constant fear and worry.

When the terrorist attacks happened on September 11, this constant stress and worry seemed to just be magnified. In fact, many people even years later report they are still scared that something of that magnitude could happen again – perhaps closer to them. We don't feel safe in our country anymore.

Turn on the news or open up a newspaper and we are bombarded with disturbing images and stories. We begin to wonder if we are safe anywhere. In this, the information age, never before have we had so much access to so much data.

The economy is another stressor. Our country is in debt and so are many Americans. Soaring gas prices, outrageous housing costs, even the cost of food has sent many Americans to work in jobs that are unsatisfying and tedious. They work these jobs because they need a paycheck. Today, it's more important to bring home the bacon rather than work in a dream career.

Having more women in the workplace adds to the stress. So many women feel the need to be everything to everyone and that includes a paycheck earner, housekeeper, mom, wife, daughter, and sibling. The only problem with that is some women just don't make any time for themselves thus contributing to their stress levels being at an all-time high.

Even children can feel the pressure of stress and anxiety. Teenagers who want to go to college find themselves pushing themselves during their studies to try and obtain scholarships so they can attend schools that have ever increasing tuition costs.

They find themselves having to hold down part-time jobs on top of all that to earn money for extras that their parents can no longer afford. Add peer pressure into the mix and you have a veritable pressure cooker!

Cell phones, internet, palm pilots, blackberries, i-pods – we are always on the go and always reachable. We don't make time to relax and enjoy life any more. Why not? We certainly should!

We feel pressure to do these things because we think we HAVE to, not because we WANT to. All too often, it's difficult for people to just say "No". Not saying that one little word piles up un-needed expectations and obligations that make us feel anxious.

All of us will experience situations that may cause us to become stressed or feel anxious. The reasons are too many to note but can include, buying a property, having guests stay over (in-laws!), being bullied, exams, looking after children, managing finances, relationship issues, traveling etc.

Stress is a 'normal' function of everyday life. There's good stress and bad stress. Only when it appears to take over our lives does it become a problem.

Everyone will have different reasons why a situation causes them pressure and causes stress. As a rule it's usually when we don't feel in control of a situation, then we feel its grip tightening around us causing us to feel worried or 'stressed'.

If stress is caused by not feeling in control of a situation, the answer is to try and reverse this, and regain that control. The good news is: YOU CAN!

You have everything inside you that you need to overcome your stress and the accompanying anxiety. The problem is, often we don't realize that we can be in control because we sometimes feel so out of control. But the tools are there, you just have to use them.

First, let's look at the barriers we put up that are preventing us from becoming healthy and getting rid of our anxiety and stress.

BLOCKING BEHAVIORS THAT CAUSE YOUR STRESS

There are three obsessive behaviors that you are likely to be engaging in that impede your healing process and stop you from enjoying a stress-free life. Recognizing these barriers can be a great first step toward getting rid of the problems that go with being too stressed.

First is obsessive negativity. When you are obsessively negative, it means that you have a tendency toward being "negative" about people, places, situations, and things in your life.

Perhaps you find yourself saying things like "I can't do this!" or "No one understands!" or "Nothing ever works!", for example. You may be doing this unconsciously, but essentially you have what's known as a "sour grapes" attitude, and it keeps you from knowing what it's like to view life from a positive perspective and enjoy the beauty in yourself and people around you! There's a whole world out there for you...with happiness and positive thinking.

Second, you have obsessive perfectionism. When you engage in obsessive perfectionism, everything has to be right. You are centered on trying to do everything "just so" to the point of driving yourself into an anxious state of mind. You may find yourself making statements such as, "I have to do this right, or I'll be a failure!" or "If I am not precise, people will be mad at me!" You expect a high degree of perfection from yourself and those around you. This behavior may be just under the threshold of your awareness, but it can interfere with your ability to enjoy things without feeling "uptight" and "stressed."

And, finally there is obsessive analysis. When you are obsessed about analyzing things, you find yourself wanting to re-hash a task or an issue over and over again. For instance, you might find yourself making statements such as, "I need to look this over, study it, and know it inside and out...or else I can't relax!" or "If I relax and let things go without looking them over repeatedly, things go wrong!"

While analytical thinking is an excellent trait, if it's done in excess you never get to stop and smell the roses because you're too busy trying to analyze everything and everyone around you. Gaining insight into this type of behavior is one of the most important keys to letting go of stress, and getting complete power over your anxiety.

If you find yourself engaging in any of the above "Blocking Behaviors", there are two things you can do to help yourself. First, ask the people you know, love, and trust, "Am I negative about things?", "Do I complain a lot?", and "Am I difficult to be around?"

The answers may be hard for you to listen to, as the truth sometimes hurts a great deal. But the insight you will get from others' assessment of you is invaluable, and you'll know precisely how others see you. Accept their comments as helpful information not as criticism and know that you will gain amazing insights from what you hear.

Second, keep a journal to write down and establish patterns of when you are using "blocking behaviors." Even if you are not thrilled with the idea of writing, you can make little entries into a notebook or journal each day. The great part is that you'll begin to see patterns in your behavior that reveal exactly what you're doing to prevent yourself from curing your anxiety.

We'll give you some great stress busting techniques later in the book, but you need to recognize these behaviors first so you can move into the "healing" stage and conquer your stress and anxiety.

Many people think that stress and anxiety is the same thing but this couldn't be further from the truth!

IS IT STRESS OR IS IT ANXIETY?

Contrary to popular belief, there is a difference between stress and anxiety. Stress comes from the pressures we feel in life, as we are pushed by work or any other task that puts undue pressure on our minds and body, adrenaline is released, extended stay of the hormone causes depression, a rise in the blood pressure and other negative changes and effects.

One of these negative effects is anxiety. With anxiety, fear overcomes all emotions accompanied by worry and apprehension, making a person a recluse and a bagful of jitters. Other symptoms are chest pains, dizziness, and shortness of breath and panic attacks.

Stress is caused by an existing stress-causing factor or stressor. Anxiety is stress that continues after that stressor is gone. Stress can come from any situation or thought that makes you feel frustrated, angry, nervous, or even anxious. What is stressful to one person is not necessarily stressful to another.

Anxiety is a feeling of apprehension or fear and is almost always accompanied by feelings of impending doom. The source of this uneasiness is not always known or recognized, and can add to the distress you feel.

Stress is the way our bodies and minds react to something which upsets our normal balance in life; an example of stress is the response we feel when we are frightened or threatened. During stressful events our adrenal glands release adrenaline, a hormone that activates our body's defense mechanisms causing our hearts to pound, blood pressure to rise, muscles to tense, and the pupils of our eyes to dilate.

A principal indication of increased stress is an escalation in your pulse rate; however, a normal pulse rate doesn't necessarily mean you aren't stressed. Constant aches and pains, palpitations, anxiety, chronic fatigue, crying, over or under-eating, frequent infections, and a decrease in your sexual desire are signs you may notice which indicate you may be under stress.

Of course, every time we are under stress, we do not react to such extremes and we are not always under such great duress or fear every time we are confronted with a stressful situation.

Some people are more susceptible than others to stress; for some, even ordinary daily decisions seem insurmountable. Deciding what to have for dinner or what to buy at the store, is a seemingly monumental dilemma for them. On the other hand, there are those people, who seem to thrive under stress by becoming highly productive and seem to be driven by the force of pressure.

Research shows women with children have higher levels of stress related hormones in their blood than women without children. Does this mean women without children don't experience stress? Absolutely not!

It means that women without children may not experience stress as often or to the same degree which women with children do. This means for women with children, it's particularly important to schedule time for yourself to relax; you will be in a better frame of mind to help your children and meet the daily challenge of being a parent, once your stress level is reduced.

Anxiety, on the other hand, is a feeling of unease. Everybody experiences it when faced with a stressful situation, for example before an exam or an interview, or during a worrying time such as illness. It is normal to feel anxious when facing something difficult or dangerous and mild anxiety can be a positive and useful experience.

However, for many people, anxiety interferes with normal life. Excessive anxiety is often associated with other psychiatric conditions, such as depression. Anxiety is considered abnormal when it is very prolonged or severe, it happens in the absence of a stressful event, or it is interfering with everyday activities such as going to work.

The physical symptoms of anxiety are caused by the brain sending messages to parts of the body to prepare for the "fight or flight" response. The heart, lungs and other parts of the body work faster. The brain also releases stress hormones, including adrenaline. Common indicators of excessive anxiety include:

- Diarrhea
- Dry mouth
- Rapid heartbeat or palpitations
- Insomnia
- Irritability or anger
- Inability to concentrate
- Fear of being "crazy"
- Feeling unreal and not in control of your actions which is called depersonalization

Anxiety can be brought on in many ways. Obviously, the presence of stress in your life can make you have anxious thoughts. Many people who suffer from anxiety disorders occupy their minds with excessive worry. This can be worry about anything from health matters to job problems to world issues.

Some drugs, both recreational and medicinal, can lead to stress and symptoms of anxiety due to either side effects or withdrawal from the drug. Such drugs include cold remedies, and decongestants, bronchodilators for asthma, tricyclic antidepressants, cocaine, amphetamines, diet pills, ADHD medications, and thyroid medications.

A proper diet is essential for preserving good health and helping reduce unwanted stress. However, some foods and drinks can act as powerful stimulants to the body and hence are a direct cause of stress. Examples include caffeine drinks, alcohol, excessive sugar and smoking. This stimulation, while it can be quite pleasurable in the short term, may be harmful in the long run and can cause stress that leads to irritability and anxiety.

Performance anxiety is good stress that is related to specific situations, like taking a test or making a presentation in public. Post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) is a stress disorder that develops after a traumatic event like war, physical or sexual assault, or a natural disaster. Left unrecognized and untreated, it can lead to severe medical problems.

While anxiety may seem a bit scary, what's even scarier is that excessive anxiety and stress can lead to depression. Suffering from depression can be a lifelong struggle as I well know, but the good news is that all of this is manageable!

So, let's take a few little quizzes to see if you are suffering from too much stress, excessive anxiety, or depression.

TIME FOR THE QUIZ!

Before you begin here, let me tell you that I am not a medical professional. This information has come from reliable sources but it isn't meant to be a complete diagnostic tool in any way. These quizzes are simply guidelines to help you recognize any problems you might have and be able to effectively deal with those problems. If you feel that you may have difficulty coping with stress or anxiety, you should consult with a medical professional.

Because depression can be the most serious of our topics, let's start by seeing if you may be depressed. Keep in mind that everyone has “blue” days. The thing that separates clinical depression from simple melancholy is that the symptoms occur over a period of time. They don’t come and go, they stay around for a long while and can affect your life adversely.

Ask yourself the following questions. Answer yes if you’ve been feeling this way consistently over a period of two weeks.

1. Do you find yourself constantly sad?
2. Are you unmotivated to do simple things like shower, clean up the house, or make dinner?
3. Do people tell you you’re overly irritable?
4. Do you have trouble concentrating?
5. Are you feeling isolated from family and friends even when they are around you?
6. Have you lost interest in your favorite activities?
7. Do you feel hopeless, worthless, or guilty for no reason at all?
8. Are you always tired and have trouble sleeping?
9. Has your weight fluctuated significantly?

If you can answer “Yes” to five or more of these questions, you could be suffering from clinical depression.

If you think you are depressed, ACT NOW! You deserve to be happy! It is important for you to seek out the help of a medical professional either a doctor or a therapist. There are many medications out there that can help with depression.

But, this book is about stress and anxiety, so let’s see if you are overly stressed out. Ask yourself the following:

1. Do you worry constantly and cycle with negative self-talk?
2. Do you have difficulty concentrating?
3. Do you get mad and react easily?

4. Do you have recurring neck or headaches?
5. Do you grind your teeth?
6. Do you frequently feel overwhelmed, anxious or depressed?
7. Do you feed your stress with unhealthy habits-eating or drinking excessively, smoking, arguing, or avoiding yourself and life in other ways?
8. Do small pleasures fail to satisfy you?
9. Do you experience flashes of anger over a minor problem?

If you can answer "Yes" to most of these questions, then you may have excessive stress in your life. The good news is that you've bought this book and will learn some valuable techniques to cope with that stress. But we'll get to that later!

Let's move on to anxiety.

1. Do you experience shortness of breath, heart palpitation or shaking while at rest?
2. Do you have a fear of losing control or going crazy?
3. Do you avoid social situations because of fear?
4. Do you have fears of specific objects?
5. Do you fear that you will be in a place or situation from which you cannot escape?
6. Do you feel afraid of leaving your home?
7. Do you have recurrent thoughts or images that refuse to go away?
8. Do you feel compelled to perform certain activities repeatedly?
9. Do you persistently relive an upsetting event from the past?

A "Yes" answer to more than four of these questions can indicate an anxiety disorder.

Suffering from depression, too much stress, or excessive anxiety can endanger your overall health and it's time to take steps to overcome this – RIGHT NOW!

Stress and anxiety affects many factors in our body not only in our mental state. Heart attacks, cancer and other deadly diseases can be related to stress and anxiety because of the changes in the chemical composition in our body due to the stress and anxiety.

You don't have to be a victim of stress and anxiety, its just all about discipline and having a proper schedule. Not taking in anything you cannot handle will be a lot of help. Learn your limitations and stick to it. Do not over exert yourself. Just try to go over the border an inch at a time.

You can lead a productive successful and fulfilling life and career without the need to endanger your health. If not, you are not only killing yourself, you are also driving your family and friends and all the people around you away.

Stress is a natural part of life. It can be both physical and mental and much of it can come from everyday pressures. Everyone handles stress differently, some better than others.

Left unchecked, however, stress can cause physical, emotional, and behavioral disorders which can affect your health, vitality, and peace-of-mind, as well as personal and professional relationships.

As we've said, stress and anxiety can lead to panic attacks. Speaking from experience, I can tell you that having a panic attack can be a serious situation. Let's explore that subject a little more.

PANIC ATTACKS

One of the unfortunate outcomes from suffering from excessive stress and anxiety is a physical reaction of your body to the situation. It's like your body is telling you that you need to rest for a moment. Except when you're having a panic attack, it's anything BUT restful.

Suffering a panic attack can cause trouble breathing, your body can fell disconnected, and your heart may be beating at an extremely fast rate.

Some people try "walk it off" or wait until it passes. But this may not work. You may feel like you are dying. This will show you how your body reacts to excessive stress and anxiety.

So, let's look at some signs that you might be having a panic attack. The following list gives some warning signs of an oncoming panic attack.

- Heart palpitations
- A pounding heart, or an accelerated heart rate
- Sweating
- Trembling or shaking
- Shortness of breath
- A choking sensation
- Chest pain or discomfort
- Nausea or stomach cramps
- A feeling of unreality
- Fear of losing control or going crazy
- Fear of dying
- Numbness or a tingling sensation in your face and limbs
- Chills or hot flashes

You would be surprised at how many people go to the hospital emergency room completely sure that they're having a heart attack only to find out that it's a panic attack. Their symptoms can be that intense!

It's very difficult for your loved ones to imagine or even understand what you are going through when you have a panic attack. They may even lose patience with you, tell you to "get over it", or think you're faking. It may help if you show them the following scenario.

You are standing in line at the grocery store. It's been a long wait but there's only one customer to go before you make it to the cashier. Wait, what was that?

An unpleasant feeling forms in your throat, your chest feels tighter, now a sudden shortness of breath, and what do you know—your heart skips a beat. “Please, God, not here.”

You make a quick scan of the territory—is it threatening? Four unfriendly faces are behind you and one person is in front. Pins and needles seem to prick you through your left arm, you feel slightly dizzy, and then the explosion of fear as you dread the worst. You are about to have a panic attack.

There is no doubt in your mind now that this is going to be a big one. Okay, time for you to focus. You know how to deal with this – at least you hope you do! Start breathing deeply - in through the nose, out through the mouth.

Think relaxing thoughts, and again, while breathing in, think “Relax,” and then breathe out. But it doesn’t seem to be having any positive effect; in fact, just concentrating on breathing is making you feel self-conscious and more uptight.

Maybe if you just try to relax your muscles. Tense both shoulders, hold for 10 seconds, then release. Try it again. Nope, still no difference. The anxiety is getting worse and the very fact that you are out of coping techniques worsens your panic. If only you were surrounded by your family, or a close friend were beside you so you could feel more confident in dealing with this situation.

Now, the adrenaline is really pumping through your system, your body is tingling with uncomfortable sensations, and now the dreaded feeling of losing complete control engulfs your emotions. No one around you has any idea of the sheer terror you are experiencing. For them, it’s just a regular day and another frustratingly slow line at the grocery store.

You realize you are out of options. It’s time to run. You excuse yourself from the line looking embarrassed as it is now that it is your turn to pay. The cashier is looking bewildered as you leave your shopping behind and stroll towards the door.

There is no time for excuses—you need to be alone. You leave the supermarket and get into your car to ride it out alone. You wonder whether or not this one was the big one. The one you fear will push you over the edge mentally and physically. Ten minutes later the panic subsides. It’s only 11:00 in the morning, how in the world can you make it through the rest of your day?

If you suffer from panic or anxiety attacks, the above scenario probably sounds very familiar. It may have even induced feelings of anxiety and panic just reading it.

The particular situations that trigger your panic and anxiety may differ. Maybe the bodily sensations are a little different. What's important to realize is that panic attacks are very real to the people who are having them and they should never be pushed off to the side.

Panic attacks can occur when there is no obvious trigger and you feel completely relaxed. Out of nowhere, you can begin having the symptoms of a panic attack. The symptoms may eventually go away, but it can leave you wondering what had caused that attack. There was no obvious reason, no stressful situation, and no indicator that a panic attack might be coming on.

That's the strange thing about panic. Sometimes your mind will play tricks on you. Even when you think you're in no danger of having a panic attack, your brain might be feeling differently. That's the scary part. The good part is that there are ways you can combat panic attacks and cope much better when you find yourself in that situation.

DEALING WITH PANIC ATTACKS

If you have panic attacks, it may help to comfort you that you are not alone! You're not even one in a million. In America, it is estimated that almost 5% of the population suffer from some form of anxiety disorder.

For some, it may be the infrequent panic attacks that only crop up in particular situations-like when having to speak in front of others, while, for other people, it can be so frequent and recurring that it keeps them from leaving their home. Frequent panic attacks often develop into what medical physicians refer to as an "anxiety disorder."

There are many ways of coping with an anxiety disorder. Some may not work for you, but others just might. It helps to know some of the most common coping techniques for dealing with panic attacks when they begin.

Your first step is to recognize when a panic attack is about to begin. After you have enough of them, you start to pay attention to the tingling sensation, the shortness of breath, and the disconnection from the real life around you.

Many people have a hard time understanding what that disconnection is like. Those of us who have panic attacks are all too familiar with it. It's like you can look at a solid object and know it's there, but a part of your mind doubts that it really IS there. You may find yourself reaching out to touch the object just to make sure it is there. You may feel like you're not a part of the world around you and you have control over anything around you.

So how do you start trying to combat your panic attacks? What if I told you the trick to ending panic and anxiety attacks is to WANT to have one. That sounds strange, even contradictory, doesn't it? But the want really does help push it away.

What it means is that when you are afraid of something – in this case a panic attack – it will more than likely appear and wreak havoc. When you stand up to the attack, your chances of fending it off are much greater.

If you resist a situation out of fear, the fear around that issue will persist. How do you stop resisting—you move directly into it, into the path of the anxiety, and by doing so it cannot persist.

In essence what this means is that if you daily voluntarily seek to have a panic attack, you cannot have one. Try in this very moment to have a panic attack and I will guarantee you cannot. You may not realize it but you have always decided to panic. You make the choice by saying this is beyond my control whether it be consciously or sub-consciously.

Your real safety is the fact that a panic attack will never harm you. That is a medical fact. You are safe, the sensations are wild but no harm will come to you. Your heart is racing but no harm will come to you. The jump becomes nothing more than a two foot drop! It's perfectly safe.

Anxiety causes an imbalance in your life whereby all of the mental worry creates a top-heavy sensation. All of your focus is moved from the center of your body to the head. Schools of meditation often like to demonstrate an example of this top-heavy imbalance by showing how easily the body can lose its sense of center.

The key to overcoming panic attacks is to relax. That's easy to say but difficult to do. A good way to do this is to concentrate on your breathing making sure it is slow and steady. One of the first signs of a panic attack is difficulty breathing, and you may find yourself panting to catch a breath. When you focus on making those breaths even, your heart rate will slow down and the panic will subside.

Breathing more slowly and deeply has a calming effect. A good way to breathe easier is to let all the air out of your lungs. This forces your lungs to reach for a deeper breath next time. Continue to focus on your out-breath, letting all the air out of your lungs and soon you'll find your breathing is deeper and you feel calmer.

Ideally, you want to take the focus off the fact that you are having a panic attack. Try to press your feet, one at a time, into the ground. Feel how connected and rooted they are to the ground.

An even better way is to lie down with your bottom near a wall. Place your feet against the wall (your knees are bent) and press your feet one at a time into the wall. If you can breathe in as you press your foot against the wall, and breathe out as you release it, it will be more effective. You should alternate between your feet. Do this for 10 - 15 minutes or until the panic subsides.

Use all of your senses to take full notice of what you see, hear, feel, and smell in your environment. This will help you to remain present. Panic is generally associated with remembering upsetting events from the past or anticipating something upsetting in the future. Anything that helps keep you focused in the present will be calming. Try holding a pet; looking around your room and noticing the colors, textures, and shapes; listening closely to the sounds you hear; call a friend; or smell the smells that are near you.

Many people strongly advocate aromatherapy to deal with panic and anxiety. Lavender can have an especially calming and soothing effect when you smell it. You can find essential oil of lavender at many stores. Keep it handy and take a sniff when you start feeling anxious.

Try putting a few drops of lavender essence oil into some oil (olive or grape seed oil will do) and rub on your body. Keep a prepared mixture in a dark glass bottle for when you need it. You can even prepare several bottles, with a small one to carry with you.

Other essential oils known to help panic and panic attacks are helichrysum, frankincense, and marjoram. Smell each of them, and use what smells best to you, or a combination of your favorite oils mixed in olive or grape seed oil.

You may want to prepare yourself BEFORE a panic attack happens. When you're not in a panicked state, make a list of the things that you're afraid will happen. Then write out calming things that tell you the opposite of your fears. Then you can repeat these things to yourself when the panic starts to come.

Prepare a list of things to do in case of panicked feelings, and it will be ready for you when you need it. Fill it with lots of soothing messages and ideas of calming things to do. I find this to be a very helpful tool and am never without my small notebook that has these positive affirmations in it.

Panic can be a very scary thing to go through, especially if you're alone. Preparing for when the panic comes can really help reduce the panic, and even sometimes help to prevent it.

Another great tool to combating anxiety and stress is to use visualization.

CALM YOURSELF WITH SELF-VISUALIZATION

It has been said that man can do anything he can imagine. If you can visualize it, you can do it.

The purpose of visualization is to enable you to quickly clear mental stress, tension, and anxious thinking. The visualization can be used when feeling stressed and is particularly useful when your mind is racing with fearful, anxious thinking.

This visualization process, when practiced frequently, is very effective for eliminating deep-seated mental anxieties or intrusive thoughts. To gain maximum benefit, the exercise must be carried out for longer than 10 minutes at a time, as anything shorter will not bring noticeable results.

There is no right or wrong way to carry out the visualization. Be intuitive with it and do not feel you are unable to carry it out if you feel you are not very good at seeing mental imagery. As long as your attention is on the exercise, you will gain benefit.

It is best to do this exercise in a quiet place where you won't be disturbed, and then when you are more practiced you will be able to get the same positive results in a busier environment such as the workplace. You should notice a calming effect on your state of mind along with a sensation of mental release and relaxation.

Either sitting or standing, close your eyes and move your attention to your breath. To become aware of your breathing, place one hand on your upper chest and one on your stomach. Take a breath and let your stomach swell forward as you breathe in and fall back gently as you breathe out. Take the same depth of breath each time and try to get a steady rhythm going.

Your hand on your chest should have little or no movement. Again, try to take the same depth of breath each time you breathe in. This is called Diaphragmatic Breathing.

When you feel comfortable with this technique, try to slow your breathing rate down by instituting a short pause after you have breathed out and before you breathe in again. Initially, it may feel as though you are not getting enough air in, but with regular practice this slower rate will soon start to feel comfortable.

It is often helpful to develop a cycle where you count to three when you breathe in, pause, and then count to three when you breathe out (or 2, or 4—whatever is comfortable for you). This will also help you focus on your breathing without any other thoughts coming into your mind.

If you are aware of other thoughts entering your mind, just let them go and bring your attention back to counting and breathing. Continue doing this for a few minutes. (If you practice this, you will begin to strengthen the Diaphragmatic Muscle, and it will start to work normally—leaving you with a nice relaxed feeling all the time.)

Now move your attention to your feet. Try to really feel your feet. See if you can feel each toe. Picture the base of your feet and visualize roots growing slowly out through your soles and down into the earth. The roots are growing with quickening pace and are reaching deep into the soil of the earth. You are now rooted firmly to the earth and feel stable like a large oak or redwood tree.

Stay with this feeling of grounded safety and security for a few moments. Once you have created a strong feeling or impression of being grounded like a tree, visualize a cloud of bright light forming way above you. A bolt of lightning from the luminous cloud hits the crown of your head, and that ignites a band of bright white light descending slowly from your head all the way down your body, over your legs, and out past your toes.

As the band of light passes over you, feel it clearing your mental state. It is illuminating your mind and clearing any disturbing or stressful thoughts that you may have been thinking about. Repeat this image four or five times until you feel a sense of clearing and release from any anxious thinking.

In finishing, see yourself standing under a large, luminescent waterfall. The water is radiant and bubbling with vitality and life. As you stand under the waterfall, you can feel the water run over every inch of your body, soothing you and instilling within you a sense of deep calm.

Try to taste the water. Open your mouth and let it run into your mouth, refreshing you. Hear it as it bounces off the ground around you. The water is life itself and it is washing away stress and worry from your mind and body. After a moment, open your eyes.

Try to use all of your senses when carrying out the visualization. To make the pictures in your mind as real as possible, use your senses of touch, taste, and hearing. Feel the water trickle down your body; hear the sound it makes as it splashes over you.

The more realistic the imagined scenarios, the more benefit you will gain. Many people report very beneficial and soothing results from using these simple visualizations frequently. The mind is much like a muscle in that, in order to relax, it needs to regularly release what it is holding onto.

You can use any situation or location that will help calm you. We liken this to "finding your happy place". Maybe you feel relaxed in a swimming pool or on the beach. Imagine yourself there. Just make sure wherever you go in your mind is a place where you can be calm and rested.

By visualizing the different situations, you are allowing your mind to release. It is like sending a message to your brain that when you close your eyes and begin this process it is time for letting go of anything that it has been mentally holding onto, including anxious thinking.

In order to train your mind how to let go of the stress, it is important to practice this daily. With practice, you can learn to release all stress within minutes of starting the exercise. Your daily practice should take place before going to bed, as that will enable you to sleep more soundly.

Many people do not do these visualizations in the bedroom but some other room before going to bed. That way, when they enter the bedroom and close the door, they are leaving the mental stress and anxious thinking behind them. Just be sure you have the opportunity to totally concentrate on your mental images.

Visualization as a tool for dealing with mental stress is very effective. If such visualization is carried out properly, you can reach a deep feeling of inner calm. This technique probably will not work in helping to end an anxiety attack, but it can help that attack from beginning. It is a very powerful support tool for ridding yourself of general anxiety sensations.

With practice, you find you go days without having anxious thinking interrupt your life, and importantly, this significantly reduces the level of general anxiety you feel.

Visualization is simply a tool you can use to overcome anxious thoughts and feelings. Let's look at various ways that you can combat excessive stress – beginning with music.

USING MUSIC TO BEAT STRESS!

Listening to music does wonder to alleviate stress. Everyone has different tastes in music. We should listen to the music that makes us feel comfortable. Sitting down and forcing yourself to listen to relaxation music that you don't like may create stress, not alleviate it. Music is a significant mood-changer and reliever of stress, working on many levels at once.

The entire human energetic system is extremely influenced by sounds, the physical body and mind respond specifically to certain tones and frequencies. Special consideration should be given to the positive effects of one actually playing or creating music themselves.

Among the first stress-fighting changes that take place when we hear a tune is an increase in deep breathing. Playing music in the background while we are working, seemingly unaware of the music itself, has been found to reduce the stress of the workplace. That's why so many retail places play music while you shop – to take your mind off the high prices!

Music was found to reduce heart rates and to promote higher body temperature - an indication of the onset of relaxation. Combining music with relaxation therapy was more effective than doing relaxation therapy alone.

Many experts suggest that it is the rhythm of the music or the beat that has the calming effect on us although we may not be very conscious about it. They point out that when we were a baby in our mother's womb, we probably were influenced by the heart beat of our mother. We respond to the soothing music at later stages in life, perhaps associating it with the safe, relaxing, protective environment provided by our mother.

Music can be one of the most soothing or nerve wracking experiences available. Choosing what will work for any individual is difficult, most will choose something they 'like' instead of what might be beneficial.

In doing extensive research on what any given piece of music produces in the physiological response system many unexpected things were found. Many of the so-called meditation and relaxation recordings actually produced adverse EEG patterns, just as bad as Hard Rock and Heavy Metal.

The surprising thing was many selections of Celtic, Native American as well as various music containing loud drums or flutes were extremely soothing. The most profound finding was any music performed live and even at moderately loud volumes even if it was somewhat discordant had very a beneficial response.

As we mentioned before, there is not a single music that is good for everyone. People have different tastes. It is important that you like the music being played. I recently picked up an Indian flute CD at Wal-Mart that is wonderful for reducing stress. Another very soothing CD has the sounds of the ocean in the background while piano music plays.

One thing though, it's probably not a good idea to play certain types of ballads or songs that remind you of a sad time in your life when you're trying to remove stress from your life. The reason is obvious. If you're trying to relax and wash away the anxious thoughts, the last thing that you need is for a sad song to bring back memories you don't need anyway.

Here are some general guidelines to follow when using music to reduce stress.

- To wash away stress, try taking a 20-minute "sound bath." Put some relaxing music on your stereo, and then lie in a comfortable position on a couch or on the floor near the speakers. For a deeper experience, you can wear headphones to focus your attention and to avoid distraction.
- Choose music with a slow rhythm - slower than the natural heart beat of about 72 beats per minute. Music that has repeating or cyclical pattern is found to be effective in most people.
- As the music plays, allow it to wash over you, rinsing off the stress from the day. Focus on your breathing, letting it deepen, slow and become regular. Concentrate on the silence between the notes in the music; this keeps you from analyzing the music and makes relaxation more complete.
- If you need stimulation after a day of work, go for a faster music rather than slow calming music. Turn up the volume and DANCE! It doesn't matter if you can actually dance or not. Just move along with the music and do what feels good. You'll be shocked at the release you can feel!
- When going gets tough, go for a music you are familiar with - such as a childhood favorite or favorite oldies. Familiarity often breeds calmness.
- Take walks with your favorite music playing on the walkman. Let the music dictate your pace. This is a great stress reliever by combining exercise (brisk walk), imagery and music. After awhile, you'll start to inhale and exhale in tune with the music and the stress will melt away.
- Listening to the sounds of nature, such as ocean waves or the calm of a deep forest, can reduce stress. Try taking a 15- to 20-minute walk if you're near the seashore or a quiet patch of woods. If not, you can buy tapes of these sounds in many music stores.

STRESS MANAGEMENT TIPS

As I've said before, stress is a part of life. There's no getting away from it. In fact, there is good stress as well as bad stress. Stress can motivate us to do things we may not normally do in a relaxed state. Stress can make us brave enough to go forward when normally we might hesitate.

People have to be resilient in order to effectively cope with daily stress and have it enhance instead of control our life. So, how do you get strong and resilient? You learn how to take control of your stress and make it work FOR you instead of AGAINST you.

Recognizing stress symptoms can be a positive influence in that we're compelled to take action. The sooner we act the better.

It's not always easy to know why you have the stress but some of the more common events that trigger those emotions are the death of a loved one, the birth of a child, a job promotion or loss, or a new relationship. We experience stress when our routine is interrupted and we readjust our lives. Your body is asking for your help when you feel these stress symptoms.

I'm going to give you some suggestions in this chapter. Not all of them will work for you, but I'm willing to bet that some of them will.

There are three major approaches to managing stress. The first is the action-oriented approach. In this method, the problems that cause stress are identified and changes are made for a stress free life.

The second approach is emotionally oriented and with it, the person overcomes stress by giving a different color to the experience that caused stress. The situation, which causes stress, is seen humorously or from a different angle.

I especially advocate this approach to stress management. Look for the good in every situation. Sometimes if you don't laugh at a situation, you'll cry – uncontrollably. That's no solution so learn to look for the humor instead of the doom.

The third way is an acceptance-oriented approach. This approach focuses on surviving the stress caused due to some problem in the past. If you have no control over the situation, there's nothing you can do about it. Sometimes you have to learn not to sweat the small stuff.

The first stress management tip is to understand the root cause of your stress. No one understands your problem better than you do. A few minutes spend to objectively look at the situation and recognize your true feelings can completely change the situation.

During this process, identify what triggered the stress. If someone close to your heart is nearby share it with the person. If you are overstressed and feel you are going to collapse, take a deep breath and count to ten. This provides a calming effect and pumps extra oxygen into your system to rejuvenate the entire body.

If you are under severe stress, close your eyes, meditate for a moment and emotionally pull out of the current situation for a little while. Stand up from your current position, take a walk and stretch yourself. Soon you will find that the stress has lessened and you'll be able to deal with the situation more effectively.

This is because you will have relaxed and relaxation is the best medicine for stress. Smiling is yet another way of stress management. If you are at the work place, just stand up and smile at your colleague in the far corner. You will see a change in your mood. Learn some simple yoga or mediation techniques that will help with every day stress.

You can also invent your own stress management tips. The basic idea is to identify the cause of stress and to pull out from it for a moment and then deal with it.

Taking a short walk and looking at objects in nature is another stress reliever. Drinking a glass of water or playing small games is a simple stress management technique. The whole idea is change the focus of your attention and when you return to the problem, it will not look as monstrous as it did before.

Here are five quick steps you can take toward relieving stress:

1. Don't just sit there.

Move! According to many psychologists, motion creates emotion. You might notice that when you are idle, it's easier to become depressed. Your heart rate slows down, less oxygen travels to your brain, and you are slumped somewhere in a chair blocking air from reaching your lungs.

Right now, regardless of how you are feeling, get up and walk around at a fast tempo. Maybe you might want to go to an empty room and jump up and down a little bit. It may sound silly but the results speak for themselves. Try it for a few minutes. It makes the adrenalin flow, gets more oxygen to your brain and works like magic.

Exercise can be a great stress buster. People with anxiety disorders might worry that aerobic exercise could bring on a panic attack. After all, when you exercise, your heart rate goes up, you begin to sweat, and your breathing becomes heavier.

Don't panic, it's not an attack! Tell yourself this over and over while you're exercising. Realize that there's a big difference between the physical side of exercise and what happens when you exercise.

2. Wake up and smell the roses.

How do you smell the roses? You could invest some money and go on that one trip you've been dreaming about? Visit a country with lots of exotic places to jolt your imagination and spur your creativity. On the other end of the spectrum, you could go for a walk in the park. The important thing is that you need to get detached from your daily activities and venture a little bit into areas that occupy your mind and body.

3. Help others cope with their problems.

Sometimes, it can be therapeutic when you engross yourself in helping others. You will be surprised how many other people's problems are worse than your own. You can offer others assistance in countless ways. It's important not to curl up in your bed and let depression and stress take over your life.

Get out and help somebody. Interacting with and listening to other people can be therapeutic, but be careful. Don't get caught up in other people's problems in an attempt to forget about your own. You still have to deal with your own problems.

4. Laugh a little.

Everybody has heard that laughter is a good internal medicine. Laughter relieves tension and loosens the muscles. It causes blood to flow to the heart and brain. More importantly, laughter releases a chemical that rids the body of pains.

Every day, researchers discover new benefits of laughter. Can you use a good dose of belly-shaking laughter every now and then? Of course you can. Then, what you are waiting for? Go a comedy club or rent some funny movies. Look for the humor in every situation.

5. Wear your knees out.

One sustainable remedy for a lot of people when the going gets tough would be prayer. Many people, prayer is like meditation. It doesn't matter what you call it, as long as you have a place to go to that relieves stress.

MORE STRESS MANAGEMENT TIPS

6. Make stress your friend

Acknowledge that stress is good and make stress your friend! Look for something positive to happen. Based on the body's natural "fight or flight" response that burst of energy will enhance your performance at the right moment. I have not seen a top sportsman totally relaxed before a big competition. Use stress wisely to push yourself that little bit harder when it counts most.

7. Stress is contagious

Stress is contagious. What I mean by this is that negative people can bring other people down and positive people can bring people up. Negativity breeds stress and all some people know how to do is complain. You can look at this in one of two ways. First, they see you as a positive, upbeat person and hope that you can bring them back "up". If that's not it, then they're just a negative person and can't feel good about themselves unless those around them are negative as well.

Don't get caught up in their negative behavior. Recognize that these people have their own stress and then limit your contact with them. You can try to play stress doctor and teach them how to manage their stress better, but be aware that this may contribute more to your own stress, so tread lightly.

8. Copy good stress managers

When people around you are losing their head, which of them keeps calm? What are they doing differently? What is their attitude? What kind of language do they use to describe the situation?

Figure it out or sit them down for a chat. There's no sense in re-inventing the wheel. Learn from the best stress managers and copy what they do.

9. Use heavy breathing.

You can trick your body into relaxing by using the heavy breathing technique. Breathe in slowly for a count of 10 then breathe out for a count of 10. Repeat the 10-10 breathing until your heart rate slows down, and things start to feel more normal.

10. Stop stress thoughts

It is possible to tie yourself up in a stress knot all by yourself. "If this happens, then that might happen and then we're all up the creek"! Most of these things never happen, so why waste all that energy worrying needlessly?

Give stress thoughts the red light and stop them in their tracks. Okay something might go wrong, but how likely is that and what can you do to prevent it?

11. Know your stress hot spots and trigger points

Presentations, interviews, meetings, giving difficult feedback, tight deadlines all cause stress. Your heart rate can go up just writing down things that bother you.

Make a list of stress triggers or hot buttons. Be specific. Is it only presentations to a certain audience that get you worked up? Does one project cause more stress than another? Did you drink too much coffee?

Knowing what causes your stress is powerful information. You can take action to make it situations less stressful. Do you need to learn some new skills? Do you need extra resources? Do you need to switch to decaffeinated coffee or drink more water?

12. Eat, drink, sleep and be happy!

Lack of sleep, poor diet and no exercise wreaks havoc on our mind and body. It's kind of obvious, but often ignored as a cause of stress. Listen to your mother and don't burn the candle at both ends!

Avoid using artificial means to dealing with your stress. That means don't automatically pour a glass of wine when you think you're getting stressed out and don't light up a cigarette. Alcohol, nicotine, caffeine, and drugs can actually make the problem worse. A better idea is to practice the relaxation techniques we've given you. Then, after you're relaxed, you can have that glass of wine if you want.

13. Go outside and enjoy Mother Nature.

A little sunshine and activity can have an amazing effect on your stress level and enhance your entire outlook on life. Your improved attitude will have a positive effect on everyone in your family and circle of friends. Things that seemed overwhelming will soon become trivial matters, causing you to wonder what the problem was in the first place.

Not only will you be less stressed, you will be healthier, happier, and more energetic; ready to face whatever obstacles come your way.

14. Give yourself permission to be a 'kid' again.

What did you enjoy when you were a child? Draw; paint, play with play-dough or clay, dance, or read. Be creative, allow yourself the freedom to express yourself without worry that you're not keeping up with the image of who you are 'supposed' to be. Just relax and enjoy yourself. We all have a little child in us and it's a good idea to allow expression of the child within from time to time.

15. Don't set unrealistic for goals for yourself.

Many of us set ourselves up for defeat simply by setting unrealistic goals. For example, if you are dieting, realize you cannot lose 40 pounds in one or two months. Setting a goal of a few pounds a week is more realistic.

Whatever your goal is, allow sufficient time to reach your goals and realize that occasional setbacks may occur. Don't beat yourself up over setbacks, just keep trying and success will come.

16. Learn to say 'no' occasionally.

Often, many of us feel we have to say 'yes' to everyone, every time we are asked for help and feel that we must respond in a positive fashion. But, remember, you cannot be all things to all people. You must first meet your own needs before you can truly give others what they need while at the same time keeping yourself happy.

You don't have to do everything your family, friends, and others ask. Of course you can and should help others, but first make sure you have done what is necessary to take care of yourself.

17. Make time for yourself, your number one priority;

Once your own needs are met you will find you have more time for others. And you may find more pleasure in helping others when you don't feel that you must always put others needs before your own.

We're not done yet! There are so many great ways to combat stress and anxiety. You deserve to get all the information you can. After all, that's really why you're reading this book, isn't it? Here's some more stress busters.

STILL MORE STRESS RELIEVERS!

18. Scream!!

That's right, scream at the top of your lungs, as loud as you can. While this may not be feasible in your home, it works great when you're in your car with the windows rolled up. Let out a guttural yell from deep down inside. It's liberating and will relieve stress immediately!

19. Sing.

As I said in a previous chapter, music can be extremely beneficial when getting rid of stress. Think how much better you can feel when you belt out "Copacabana" at the top of your lungs! Who cares if you can't carry a tune? You're doing this for you and other people don't matter right now!

20. Take up a new hobby.

Knitting, crocheting or another hobby that takes focus and occupies your hands and mind. Don't worry about being good at it. It's the process that's beneficial not the end result. Sitting still while performing repetitive movements is calming and stabilizing for many people. It can be time to collect your thoughts and redirect your energy.

21. Start a garden.

Even apartment-dwellers can do this. Inside in pots, pots on the patio, a small spot in your yard. There is a little work to setting it up.

Tending plants, fruits, vegetables, flowers and watching them grow, bloom, or yield food is rewarding in itself. Avid gardeners say working a garden is the best way to control stress and worry. An added benefit is the creation of a more beautiful and restful environment.

22. Play with a dog or cat.

Experts say pet owners have longer lives and fewer stress symptoms than non-pet owners. Animals are used regularly as therapy for children and older patients. Playing with your pet provide good vibrations – for you and for the pet! It's a form of personal interaction with no pressure to meet anyone's expectations!

23. Look at the stars and the moon.

It can be a very humbling experience to sit with your hands behind your head and gaze up into the night sky. It's more than humbling; it's downright beautiful and relaxing!

24. Treat yourself to some comfort food.

But be careful or over-eating could become your big stressor. Enjoy in moderation and make yourself feel better.

There you have twenty-four ways to relax and remove stress! You can probably come up with some of your own ways as well! The key is to find something that makes you feel better when you are when you are feeling stressed out or overwhelmed and practice that method faithfully. You'll be a healthier person overall.

JUST SAY NO! (STOP being a People Pleaser)

One huge problem people who are overly stressed out have is the ability to say "No" when they need to. There's no reason why you have to say "Yes" to everyone. And, there are many times when you should turn them down. If you find yourself agreeing to do things when you really don't want to, you're a people pleaser. In general, this isn't a bad trait to have, but it can cause a huge amount of unhealthy stress.

People pleasers think of other people's needs before their own. They worry about what other people want, think, or need, and spend a lot of time doing things for others. They rarely do things for themselves, and feel guilty when they do.

People pleasers often hold back from saying what they really think or from asking for something they want if they think someone will be upset with them. Yet they often spend time with people who don't consider their needs at all. In fact, people pleasers often feel driven to make insensitive or unhappy people feel better - even at their own detriment.

Constantly trying to please other people is draining and many people pleasers feel anxious, worried, unhappy, and tired a lot of the time. They may not understand why no one does anything for them, when they do so much for others - but they often won't ask for what they need.

People pleasers will be under constant stress by agreeing to do for things for others when they may need those same people to help them out. Usually when they ask for help, they find others conveniently "occupied".

A people pleaser may believe that if they ask someone for help and that person agrees, that person would be giving out of obligation, not because they really wanted to. The thinking goes "If they really wanted to help, they would have offered without my asking".

This line of thinking happens because people pleasers themselves may feel obliged to help and do not always do things because they want to. Sometimes, people pleasers have been taught that their worth depends on doing things for other people.

People pleasers are not only very sensitive to other people's feelings, and often take things personally, but they also rarely focus on themselves.

When they do take a moment for themselves, they feel selfish, indulgent, and guilty which is why they are often on the go, rushing to get things done. Because people pleasers accomplish so much and are easy to get along with, they are often the first to be asked to do things. They are vulnerable and sometimes are taken advantage of.

People pleasers' focus is usually on others and away from themselves. They sometimes feel empty, or don't know how they feel, or what they want for themselves. It's possible to change this pattern and feel better about yourself. It's easier than you think!

First, practice saying the word NO. This is an important word! Say it as often, just to hear the word come out of your mouth. Say it out loud when you are alone. Practice phrases with NO in them, such as, "No, I can't do that" or "No, I don't want to go there". Try it for simple things first, and then build your way up to harder situations.

Stop saying YES all the time. Take a pause or take a breath before responding to someone's request. You may want to answer requests with "I need to think about it first, I'll get back to you" or "Let me check my schedule and call you back". Say any phrase that you feel comfortable with before you automatically respond with YES.

Take small breaks, even if you feel guilty about taking a break. You won't always feel guilty, but most likely in the beginning you will. Remember, your mental health is well worth the aggravation you may have to take from others. What's more important is to you. When you are healthy, those around you will be healthy!

Figure out what gives you pleasure and do it. For example, you may like reading magazines, watching videos, going to a park, or listening to music. Take time to do and enjoy those things.

Ask someone to help you with something. This may be a hard thing to do, but you can do it! After all, if everyone else is asking YOU for favors, why shouldn't YOU ask for a favor in return? But be tolerant if they turn you down. Just because you have always told them "Yes" doesn't mean they always have to tell you "Yes".

Check in with how you feel about yourself and what you are thinking. This is part of who you are and it's important to be aware of these things. Try saying what you feel and think more often. Just remember to be civil in certain situations.

You deserve to take time for yourself, to say NO, and to take care of yourself without feeling guilty. It's within your reach to change - one small step at a time!

TAKE A BREAK

McDonald's jingle has it right – You Deserve A Break Today!

We often know inside ourselves when we need a break. It might be a full-fledged vacation or a just a weekend getaway. Either way, getting out of the daily grind can be amazingly relaxing and a good way to get rid of stress and anxiety.

Unfortunately, many people think they can't take the time to get away. They can't afford to go anywhere, or they can't leave the job. This is stressful thinking. Get out and get away!

How many times have you continued to work, and knew that you could not give 100% to the task at hand? How many times have you read the same sentence over and over again because your mind kept wandering and thinking about other things? How many times have you wanted to take a break from the family or kids but were afraid of the consequences of doing so? It's time for a break!

Why do we not allow ourselves the time to take a time out? Perhaps we feel like there's just too much to be done.

There are many genuine reasons for needing to complete jobs and tasks, however we may also on occasion have hidden agendas as to why we cannot stop for a break. Why?

It could be ego. Some people simply enjoy boasting about, how late they had to work in order to complete a project or how much effort they invested in order to complete the job so quickly. It could be an effort to impress others with how good an employee or person they are. This type of person is often looking to impress others with their efforts, thereby increasing their ego in the process.

Maybe you think you just can't take the time off. Does "I can't stop; I just have to get this finished" sound familiar? WHY? So I can move on to the next thing, and the next, and the next without breaking the cycle. This person will find something that always has to be done, which will constantly prevent him/her from taking a break.

Some people just need to be needed. A mother managing the household, kids and other chores may feel as if her household will collapse if she were to put her feet up or take some time off. By not taking a break, she can keep convincing herself that she is crucial and the family would collapse without her. This may indeed be true, but is still not a good enough reason to prevent her having a rest to relieve the stress of managing a household brings.

Get rid of that thinking! You can get some amazing benefits just by taking a little time for yourself! Allowing your mind and/or body to rest can help re-focus your attention, sharpen your wits and increase motivation.

Taking time out helps to relieve stress, aids the recovery of tired muscles and also promotes the discovery that there is more to life than just work.

Many athletes will tell you that an important part of their training routine is rest. Muscles need time to repair after a workout. Remember that your brain needs rest as well. It needs time to rest and recuperate in order to perform at its best. By giving your brain time off, you'll be able to better concentrate and give tasks you once found difficult your full attention.

So you've decided that a break is in order. Good for you! A break can be anything from a 10-minute meditation session in a quiet area to a trip around the world, and anything in-between. A break should be something that takes your mind off of stressful situations and the everyday tedium of life.

So depending on the time you wish to put towards relaxing, consider reading, watching a movie, cooking, playing with the kids, riding a motorbike or driving, exercising or doing sports, traveling or simply sleeping!

While you are taking this break, allow yourself to do it and without feeling guilty about it. You will gain much by this time off, so enjoy it.

Life goes on and contrary to what your mind might be telling you, everyone will survive until you get back. Let go of everything and concentrate on YOU instead of everyone around you!

If you're feeling tired, unmotivated or just in need of a rest, don't be a martyr or look negatively at this. You may actually find allowing yourself a break will actually help you become more efficient and effective in every part of your life. You'll get the badly needed time to recharge that you need and sorely deserve!

Work can probably be one of the most stressful places to be, especially if you deal with people. You might think that none of these techniques can help you when you're around your co-workers but you couldn't be more wrong.

RELAXING AT WORK

Coffee breaks aren't the only times when you can take a moment for yourself. Taking a coffee (or smoke) break can actually add to the stress you feel when you're at work.

Some of the suggestions I've given you in this book can be practiced at work, but others cannot. Here's a tried and true method to help you relax at work.

First and foremost, find a place to sit. Sit up straight with your back against the back of your chair, your feet flat on the floor, and your hands resting lightly on your thighs.

If it's possible, close your eyes. You can do the exercise with your eyes open, but closing your eyes will help you relax more. Let your eyelids fall naturally.

Breathe in slowly through your nose, counting to 5. Hold the breath for a count of 5. Breathe out slowly, counting to 5. Repeat this several times.

Tense and hold a set of muscles for a count of 5, and then relax the set of muscles for a count of 5. When you tense each muscle set, do it as hard as you can without hurting yourself. When you release the hold, be as relaxed as possible.

Begin by tensing your feet. Do this by pulling your feet off the floor and your toes up and toward you while keeping your heels on the floor. Hold for a slow count of 5. Release the hold. Let your feet fall gently back. Feel the relaxation. Think about how it feels compared to when you tensed the muscles. Relax for a count of 5.

Next tense your thigh muscles as hard as you can. Hold for a count of 5. Relax the muscles and count to 5.

Tighten your abdominal muscles and hold for a count of 5. Relax the muscles for a count of 5. Be sure you are continuing to sit up straight.

Tense your arm and hand muscles by squeezing your hands into fists as hard as you can. Hold for a count of 5. Relax the muscles completely for a count of 5.

Tighten your upper back by pushing your shoulders back as if you are trying to touch your shoulder blades together. Hold for a count of 5. Relax for a count of 5.

Tense your shoulders by raising them toward your ears as if shrugging and holding for a count of 5. Relax for a count of 5.

Tighten your neck first by gently moving your head back (as if looking at the ceiling) and holding for 5. Relax for 5. Then gently drop your head forward and hold for 5. Relax for a count of 5. Rotate your head in a clockwise direction for a count of 5, then reverse and rotate in the opposite direction for a count of 5.

Tighten your face muscles by opening your mouth wide and holding for a count of 5. Relax for 5. Then raise your eyebrows up high and hold for 5. Relax for 5. Finally clench your eyes tightly shut and hold for 5. Relax with your eyes gently closed for 5.

Finish the exercise with breathing. Breathe in slowly through your nose, counting to 5. Hold the breath for a count of 5. Breathe out slowly, counting to five. Repeat 4 times. And that's it!

Perform this exercise or parts of this exercise whenever you need to relax, anywhere you may be sitting. This exercise should not be performed while driving.

Over time, if performed regularly, this exercise will help you recognize and relieve tension in your body. You will be able to relax specific muscles at any time without performing the entire exercise.

Pinpoint your own areas of tension then tense and relax these areas in the same way. Perform the exercise at least once a day for long-term results.

Maximize the relaxation benefits of this exercise by visualizing a peaceful scene when you finish the exercise. Visualize a scene, some place where you feel relaxed, for at least 5 minutes. Remember your happy place? Go there and enjoy it!

CONCLUSION

If you've learned nothing else from reading this book, I hope you realize and understand that there is NO WAY to completely eliminate stress from your life. What you can do is to learn how to think positively and make that stress work for you.

Stress management isn't as difficult as it might seem. However, I can't emphasize that if you think you have too much stress in your life, you probably do and it may be helpful to talk with your doctor. Reactions to stress can be a factor in depression, anxiety and other disorders, your doctor may suggest that you visit with a psychiatrist, psychologist, social worker, or other qualified counselor.

I am not a medical professional. All I want to do is give you some tools to help you better cope with those things that sometimes make us overwhelmed and feel out of control. Nothing in this book should be taken as medical advice. You should consult with your doctor or other medical professional. These stress management tips are simply cost effective methods to effectively reduce stress. They can be practiced almost anywhere and anytime.

You may want to look into time management tools in order to get rid of some of your stress. When we feel like we don't have enough time to do the things that need to be done, more stress is created and this can lead to anxiety.

If you feel you are in need of help, do not hesitate. The cause of your stress might be for no reason at all. But it might be physical in its roots. Someone else might be able to solve it easily. Understand your limitations and it can relieve stress to a large extent.

Stress is a normal part of life. In small quantities, stress is good -- it can motivate you and help you be more productive. However, too much stress, or a strong response to stress, is harmful.

It can set you up for general poor health as well as physical or psychological illnesses like infection, heart disease, or depression. Persistent and unrelenting stress often leads to anxiety and unhealthy behaviors like overeating and abuse of alcohol or drugs.

Causes of stress differ from person to person, and what relieves stress is not the same for everyone. In general making certain lifestyle changes and finding healthy, enjoyable ways to cope with stress helps most people. I hope that I've given you some great ways of dealing with the stress that we all feel!

Above all, remember that you are not alone in this battle. There are literally thousands of people who feel overwhelmed and nearly out of control. That's why I wanted to give you this book. So you can find peace within yourself and realize that we're all on this planet for a reason.

You are too! Enjoy life and live it to its fullest. And when you feel yourself stressed out or anxious, relax, breathe through it, and know that there are many people who know exactly how you feel.
